PREWORD

Dear Kinsfolk and Friends:

In 1807 Mr. Orrin Gilbert and Miss Mary Barber were Married in Litchfield, Conn. In 1828, together with several of their brothers, and sisters, they emigrated west and settled on the Western Reserve in Ohio. The descendants of these pioneer families are now numerous in Summit and Portage Counties, and in August, 1892 they formed the "Gilbert-Barber Association." Reunions have followed annually on the second Thursday of August to the mutual profit and the better acquaintance of the members and the strengthening of the ties of kith and kin. Much interest in our family history was shown and a committee was placed in charge of the work, hence this compilation of our ancestry and of the families of today.

We have labored to produce a family history worthy of descending to the posterity to which it is bequeathed, and it is written to preserve the early history of the Barber and Gilbert families in the hope that its members-one and all-may imitate the example of their worthy ancestors in all their virtues and praiseworthy deeds, aspire to the highest education within their reach and make the name one of honor and worthiness in the future as it has been in the past.

Sketches of individuals are not numerous for we have been a quiet family and because of distance and time minute study of members is quite difficult. This is a family affair and while it speaks to and will interest our own family the outside world will kindly take note that it is a family matter and that we are not bound to interest them. We are blood relations and within our own circle may be kindly affectioned one to another and look in our own glass, for by the law of heredity: "like begets like or the likeness of some ancestor," we are but the reflections of these our ancestors so these past generations are our family mirror in which we see reflected our own image.

These pages are not written in the purpose of shining by the reflected, borrowed light of illustrious ancestors, but rather in the hope that we may be inspired to rise and shine by a light of our own kindling. These researches have been enjoyable. Family worthies hitherto hidden have been found and made acquainted. Undoubtedly in some cases errors in the record will be found but especial effort has been made to trace each descendant of our own immediate line male or female and most of the incompleteness of the work is due to the fact that many a letter of inquiry unreturned and unanswered testifies to the carelessness or indifference of some, who usually are the first to complain of errors and omissions. Others from out of their knowledge of family lines have rendered such efficient aid as to place the committee under obligations. Thanks are due to all such as have freely given of their treasures of family lore.

Much still remains to be gathered and inserted to complete this record, hence the choosing of this form of construction of the book, then as other data is obtained and as the boys and girls of today become the husbands and wives of tomorrow and new families thus come into being their record on new sheets may be furnished to all holding copies of this book and easily inserted in proper place, and thus the record may be kept a living, growing one as the days come and the years go by. And now these threads gathered from many sources into a manifold cord, have bounds us all into one bundle of family life, and with Montaigne (1533) we repeat: "I have here only made a nosegay of culled flowers and have brought nothing of my own but the string that ties them," hoping that others may be inspired to also go and reap in the fields whence this sheaf has been gathered.

For the Committee

It means something to be well born. With ancestors for more than two and a half centuries who possessed pure minds, sound morals and healthy bodies—what an heritage to be longed for. Possessing such an inheritance one is well equipped to make the world the better for having been born.

OUR NEW ENGLAND ANCESTORS

In "Historic Towns of New England" by Lyman Powell we read this opening statement: "From the earliest days of the New England Colonies down to the present time those European analysts of our national life whose opinions have been based on personal observations, have usually conceded that in New England towns and villages one might at almost any period of their history find a higher average degree of physical comfort, intelligence and mental attainment, political liberty and power than was or is to be found in any other communities in "Christendom."

In walking about New England towns one finds in each a church, a town hall and school, and in a majority of them there will be found the public library, small perhaps and housed in the town hall but open to all and supported from the public funds. The first organization in a new community was the Church and the various later civil organizations were formed in strict harmony with it. The clergy were the most influential men of their times and the social and intellectual life of the community centered almost exclusively in the life of the Church. The early New England communities were intensely religious and sectarianism placed emphasis upon the form of truth rather than upon the truth itself.

The town hall stood near the "meetinghouse" usually on the village common, where as often as occasion required rich and poor, educated and illiterate, wise and foolish met together to discuss questions of "home rule" and when the vote was taken the bank president and the blacksmith, the master and the servant, the principal of the high school and the loafer around the village bar stood upon precisely the same footing. To New England belongs the credit of originating the township plan of civil organization as being the most important unit within the state.

The third everpresent requisite in every New England village was the public school open to all and supported by all. All creeds and nationalities mingled in the school-room and learned their likeness each to the other and their duties to the state and to God. Nonsectarian the school derived support from taxpayers of all sects and taught the dogmas of none. Secular in that religion was not in the course of study the school was over the bulwark of religion and the church. Nor is there any item of his yearly tax bill the typical New Englander pays more readily than his annual contribution for popular education. He reasons thus: "The more children in the schools the fewer youths and adults in the Jails and poorhouses. The better informed the mill operators the better the output of the mill; the more intelligent the voter the less the power of the political boss."

Emigrating westward the pioneers from New England carried with them the Church, the School and the love of liberty, which profoundly affected the new commonwealth. Connecticut settlers on the Western Reserve in Ohio set the seal of their character and institutions upon it and Ohio is today what Virginia was in early days—the mother of presidents. She has within her borders more colleges than any other state in the Union. In many instances their minister was chosen and the township organization completed before the pioneers left home. Thus they planted New England ideas and institutions in their new homes in the wilderness. There are townships in this Western Reserve more thoroughly New England in character and spirit today than most of the towns of New England.

Nor does her influence stop here. She sent her best blood and brain to found new commonwealths ranging from the Alleghenies to the Pacific, and thus were nearly all the states north of Mason and Dixon's line permeated with this idea of township organization and government and they brought with them their strong puritan faith—a faith in themselves, in Schools, in Churches and in the practice of the moral virtues, and we honor New England not only because she sent her best men to open the West but also because she pitched high the tone for the West. Wherever they have settled and shaped civil organization they laid the foundation of public schools and colleges controlled by christian educators and trustees even to the Pacific slope and the isles of the sea beyond. The educational system of Honolulu is based on New England models. Robert College near Constantinople has spread the New England idea of christian democracy in Church and State in Bulgaria and the Balkan States. The Huguenot Seminary in South Africa was distinctively modeled after Mt. Holyoke Seminary and the first teaching staff was made up of New England women educated at Mt. Holyoke. Wherever American Protestant missionaries have gone and established schools and colleges in Asia, Africa and Europe almost invariably the master spirits, the men and women who have given character to and established the ideas of the ideals of the institutions have been graduates of New England academies and colleges if not New England born.

As we read the Characteristics of the early Puritan fathers in Colonial days we see them reflected in a lesser degree in the communities of new—New England, the Western Reserve in Ohio, and notwithstanding the steady influx and admixture of other blood, those characteristics are still a fixed and permanent principle to-day, a golden thread running through the whole fabric a century after being planted. Those of us past middle life can readily recall childhood scenes the counterpart of the old New England manners and customs of other days. The School, the Church, and civil liberty were the foundation stones upon which our forefathers builded a citizenship that has successfully resisted all onslaughts upon it.

Such was the home of our immediate ancestors, such the training given them in shaping their lives, such the social, intellectual and religious air they breathed, and we to-day are enjoying the rich fruitage of their lives and the influence they bequeathed to us, surely a heritage worthy our best endeavor to preserve and transmit to our children undiminished and untarnished. May the mantle fall on their shoulders and the trust be accepted by them and carried to a more glorious fulfillment than we have been able to achieve.

LITCHFIELD, CONNECTICUT

ONE HUNDRED YEARS AGO.

High up on the western hills of Connecticut sits Litchfield, the home of our ancestors. County Seat of the county whose name it bears. At an altitude of more than 1,200 feet above sea, it lies on the very crest of the ridge of high land running north and south through town, making it literally a village if not a city set on a hill. In 1798 Rev. Dan Huntington, called from his position as tutor in Yale College to the pastorate of the Congregational Church in Litchfield, described it as "a delightful village on a fruitful hill, richly endowed with its schools, both professional and scientific and their accomplished teachers, with its venerable Governors and Judges, with its learned lawyers, senators and representatives, both in state and national departments and with a population enlightened and respectable Litchfield is now in its glory."

The town had before that time played a considerable part in national affairs. Owing to its position it has been chosen as a place for keeping the military stores of the colonists in the Revolutionary war and for the confinement of the royalist prisoners, and she gave a long list of sons and daughters who brought renown to their native town, causing it to claim to have been the birthplace of more noted men and women than any other place of its population in the country.

In 1810 Rev. Lyman Beecher came to the pastorate of the above church for sixteen years and here were born Henry Ward Beecher and Harriet Beecher Stow. The illustrious families of Litchfield furnished men for state officers, governors, chief justices, members of state legislatures and national congress, Judges of the United States Circuit Court, president of Constitutional conventions, Etc., Etc.

In the town of one hundred years ago no school for girls was more widely known than Miss Sarah Pierce's Seminary, the first of its kind in the country. Beginning in 1792 it gathered in the forty years of its life nearly fifteen hundred young women, the flower of the land. But its fame now lives only in the memory of their descendants.

Litchfield Hill is the Mecca of American Lawyers. The Litchfield Law School, also the first of its kind in the country, began in 1772 and conducted till 1820 by Mr. Reeve and Mr. Gould in their two small law offices within their own door-yards, in fifty years of its existence gathered in and graduated about one thousand students. Of this number sixteen became United States Senators, fifty members of Congress, forty Judges of higher courts, eight Chief Justices of states, two Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, five Cabinet ministers, several ministers to foreign countries and one a vice president. But to-day nothing remains now of this but its fame, for both offices have long since been removed, but it has made the name of Litchfield known in every state in the Union.

Why did this little country town become so noted? Of wealth, as we count wealth, there was but little; of manufactures there never has been any worthy the name. The society of Litchfield was an aristocracy in the best sense of the word, in which mind, not material things was the ruling force. There was intelligence, learning and education of no common order. The people were wholly practical, useful and unselfishly devoted to the public good. The men were all in politics and in politics for a purpose, not afraid of soiling their hands with political work. These men were willing to do hard earnest work in town meetings and in the affairs of their school districts, and because they were thus willing when called to the wider duties of the colony, the states, the confederation, Congress and the Bench, they were equipped, trained and efficient and made their influence felt with a power not to be mistaken.

But the political power of Litchfield is now well nigh vanished. The town is no longer the seat of any institution of learning, only elm trees now shade the grounds where flourished Miss Pierce's Seminary, no memorials mark the spot where Mr. Gould and Mr. Reeve taught so long and so well—it is difficult to find even a catalogue of their school; the corner where stood the dwelling of Rev. Lyman Beecher lies vacant and the house itself moved from its old site is the wing of an asylum, the church he made historic long ago gave place to another and even this, also moved from its foundations, is no longer a house of worship. All is now tradition. But Litchfield is still a town of delightful memories tinged with the melancholy induced by the thought of its departed glories, it is a place to which many still love to turn in summer days, and it is and will remain one of the most beautiful of old New England towns, N. Eng. Mag. V. 15. p 705.

By an instinct of our nature we all love to learn the place of our birth and the chief circumstances in the lives of our progenitors.

THE GILBERT NAME.

The name Gilbert is Saxon. William Camden (1551; 1623) in his "Remaines concerning Britian", London, 1870 p 81 says of its origin and signification: Gilbert, German, I supposed heretofore to signify Gold-like, bright as Aurelius or Aurelianus; or yellow-bright as Flavins with the Romans. For Geele is yellow in old Saxon and still in Dutch. But because it is written in Domesday Book (Gislebert (1085) I judge it rather to signify bright or brave pledge, for in the old Saxon Gisle signifieth a pledge and in the old English Book of S. Augustines of Canterbury sureties and pledges for keeping the peace are called Fredgisles."

It is written on the Roll of Battle Abbey (1066) Richard Fitz Gilbard a kinsman of William the Conqueror and a principal personage was for his services advanced to great honors and possessions. The Earls of Clare came of this lineage. Gilbert de Thornton was the Kings Sargeant at Law in 1281 and in 1290 Chief Justice of the Kings Bench.

In 1060 Gilbert de Gaunt came with William the Conqueror
 1100 Gislebert was Archdeacon of Buckingham;
 1115 Gilbert of Saxon origin was a citizen of London,
 joined the Crusades and was father of Thomas A. Beckett;
 1143 Gilbert the Great or the Theologian;
 1148 Gilbert Lord of Sempringham founded the order of Gilbertine friars: Gilbert the Universal Bishop of London
 1210 Gilbert Anglicus—the first English medical writer:
 1215 Gilbert Treasurer of Lincoln Cathedral;
 1225 Gilbert Bishop of Cork;
 1240 Gilbert Archdeacon of Stow;
 1414 Robert Gilbert S. F. P. Precentor of Lincoln,
 Prebend of Lincoln and afterwards Bishop of London;
 1487 Thomas Gilbert L. L. D. Prebendary of Lincoln;
 1492 Thomas Gilbert Vicargeneral of Chelsea College.

The name is eminent in the annals of the Church,
 State and learning of England through several centuries.
 William Gilbert received the degree of M. A. 1564 and M.
 D. 1569 at Cambridge College and was appointed by Queen Elizabeth as her physician in ordinary. After her death in 1603 King James I. continued him as royal physician till Gilbert's death in November of the same year. Dr.
 Gilbert's investigations were devoted to electricity and magnetism which had lain dormant practically for two thousand years. In 1600 he published in Latin his great work "De Magnete" which made him the most distinguished man in science in England during the days of the Virgin Queen and which created a great impression among the learned throughout the civilized world, Galiles, it is said, pronounced Gilbert "great to a degree that is enviable"
 and Bacon praised him as a philosopher, and he was styled the "Galiles of Magnetism," and the "Father of Modern Electricity." The English poet John Dryden wrote in his epistle to Dr. Charlton.

"Gilbert shall live till lodestones cease to draw
 Or British fleets the boundless ocean awe."

A copy of the English translation of Dr. Gilbert's
 "De Magnete" is in Case Library, Cleveland, Ohio, shelf
 No. 538. 1—1 Ref.

The earliest and principal home of the Gilberts was in Devonshire, England, and from this stock came those distinguished in naval and commercial history, geographical science and discoveries. Wescote, born in Devonshire in 1567 and wrote his history of that country in 1630, says that at Marldon on the river Dart is a chapel built by the ancestors of the Gilberts who have an ancient monument there. He describes the ancient seat of the Gilberts there and says that "this hath long continued in a family of much estimation and of knightly rank. It is very anciently written Gislebert or Gerebert as in the Conquerors Book of Survey in Devon (1085) Of this progeny have been divers of great desert and sufficiency." Dr. John Prince, the antiquarian in his "Worthies of Devon" says that the Gilberts have matched as they descended into honorable houses and have yielded matches to others whereby they touch the blood royal and from whose loins have come down many imminent persons which were of old, men of renown.

Coming down to our own times and shores in 1607 we find Sir John and Captain Raleigh Gilbert perseveringly engaged in their hereditary scheme of peopling America with Englishmen. Dr. Holmes in "Annals of America" tells of the generous contributions of Devonshire to the New England Colonies. They settled chiefly in Maine, naming a newly organized county Devonshire in honor of their English birthplace. The Gilberts at various dates came to Massachusetts, Connecticut and Virginia. Richard Gilbert came to Virginia in 1585 and Joseph Gilbert in 1645. Mr. John Gilbert was in Dorchester in 1636 and had three sons, John, Thomas and Giles.

In the National Encyclopedia American Biography Vol. 9 p 153 we read under the title Gilbert that this family originated in Devonshire England and among its members were Sir. Humphrey Gilbert and his half brother Sir Walter Raleigh, also that Jonathan Gilbert, great-nephew of Raleigh Gilbert settled in Hartford, Conn, in 1640. This Jonathan Gilbert is the English ancestor from whom has descended our Branch of the Gilbert Family.

In 1645 Jonathan Gilbert a bachelor landholder in Hartford, Conn. married Mara, daughter of John Whight.

“Jonathan Gilbert was maryed unto Mara Whight on January the twentyninth, one thousand six hundred and fortyfive.”

—Hartford Rec.

Mr. Jonathan Gilbert is frequently referred to in the Colonial records of Connecticut, which indicates the current of his public life. In April 1647, he acted as interpreter between the English Government and the aborigines rendering very important service in the Indian wars and difficulties by his facility in their language and his cool bravery. He was generally selected as leader in emergencies of danger and importance and in perilous negotiations with the crafty and faithless savages where none but a man of cool penetrating eye, wary watchfulness and a fearless temper could gain respect or safety among them.

In March, 1653, a special warrant was granted to him as marshal with “Power to rayse such considerable forces as hee sees meete” for the arrest of a certain desperado.

In 1654 the Commissioners of the English Colonies appointed Jonathan Gilbert a messenger to the chief of the Narragansetts who, in league with the Dutch of New York were hostile to the English.

In April, 1657, Jonathan Gilbert with his brother John to be joined by “an able man” provided by the “deputies in Windzor” were instructed by the Court” with all speed to goe to Northwootuck and Pacumtuck” concerning a bloody murder committed by some Indians.

In March, 1657, Jonathan Gilbert was member of the first “Troop of horse” (cavalry) organized in Connecticut under authority of the Commissioners. Mr. Richard Lord (Hartford) Captain.

In November, 1659, Mr. Gilbert was appointed to compel the payment from the Farmington Indians of the annual sum due for two years past amounting to “the full summe of eighty faddome of wampum, well strungd and merchantable” for damages from a fire caused by them.

Other instances of like character were frequent and for these valuable services to the Colony he received grants of land from the government. In 1653 he received a grant "at the common landing place in the little meadow (at Hartford) to set up a warehouse" which afterward became a station for much traffic both coast and foreign. Andrew Belcher of Boston having business there married Mr. Gilberts daughter Sarah in 1670, and their son Jonathan became Governor of Massachusetts and New Hampshire, 1730—1741 and Governor of New Jersey 1747—1757 and was founder of Princeton College.

The Springfield Town Records under date of August, 9, 1656 mention a grant of lands to Jonathan and John Gilbert at Wornoco, (Westfield) provided "they built a house within one year."

In August, 1661, the Court granted "to Jonathan Gilbert a farm to ye number of 300 acres of upland and 50 acres of meadow provided it be not preinditial to any other plantation."

By these grants and by purchasing like grants held by others he acquired title to about 1,000 acres of lands in the different settlements, which he afterwards divided among his children.

After this period Mr. Gilbert was for several years annually elected to the office of Marshal and occasionally representative to the legislature; but his chief attention was given to the improvement of his estate and care of his family.

He was peculiarly fortunate in his wife Mary, who was remarkable for her prudence and energy which contributed to his success, and who was honored in the lives of her children. She was one of those women who

"— bring to her husband's house delight and abundance Filling it full of love and the ruddy faces of children."

"God sifted a whole nation that he might send choice grain over into this wilderness."—William Stoughton, 1668.

Armorial Bearings of the Representative Family of Gilbert (anciently Gilbard) as certified to Gilbert, in the Visitation of London, 1568; Bodmin; Cornwall, etcetera.

ARMS: Argent, on a chevron gules three roses of the field.

CREST: A squirrel sejant on a hill vert, feeding on a crop of nuts, ppr.

MOTTO: “Mallem mori quam mutare” (I would rather die than show fear).

The noble family of Gilbert rose into prominence in Devonshire, during the reign of Richard I., when they held at Compton (Devonshire) the Castle of that name, formerly possessed by Walter De La Poole (or Pole). Peter De La Poole, who next held this estate assumed the name of Compton, and six descents later, Lady Joan Compton, co-heiress of William Compton, brought it by marriage, during the reign of Edward II., to Geoffrey Gilbard (or Gilbert) of Greenaway, Brixham, Devonshire, — a pleasant seat of long continuance in his family, and situated upon rising ground on the East side of the Dart, less than a mile above the town of Dartmouth.

The Gilberts were settled in this county, beyond question, as early as the Norman Conquest, and even before that time, according to one of authority, quoted by Dr. John Prince, the Devonshire Antiquary (“The worthies of Doven.”)

Certain it is that there were many men of eminence amongst them, both in arms and in letters, foremost of whom was Sir Humphrey Gilbert, whom Prince describes as: “an excellent hydrographer, and no less skilful mathematician; of an high and daring spirit, though not equally favored of fortune; yet the large volume of his virtues may be read in his noble enterprizes, the great design whereof was to discover the remote countries of America, and to bring off those savages from their diabolical superstitutions." He was deeply imbued with the adventurous spirit of the day, as might be expected from one who, on the mother's side, was brother to the gallant Sir Walter Raleigh. Prince talks of his having discovered land, an assertion which may well admit of doubt, and after one failure we find him on a second voyage, wherein Prince tells us "he made great discoveries and gave name to a certain fretum in the Northern Seas, called Gilbert's Straights unto this day." The frugal Queen Elizabeth knighted him, and, as a yet stranger instance of her bounty (for the Virgin Queen by no means delighted in seeing her courtiers married) she bestowed upon him the hand of one of her maids of honour, Anne, daughter of Sir Anthony Aucher, of Kent, by whom he had a very numerous offspring.

In 1583 he sailed to Newfoundland, and took possession in the Queen's name, of a country 200 leagues in length, by the ceremony of cutting a turf and rod. He embarked for home in the "Squirrel," a ship evidently too small for such a service, for the people aboard his larger ship "The Golden Hind" were in constant expectation of her going down. About midnight, when all was dark around, a great storm arose, and the Squirrel with its lights were all at once extinguished, and a general cry burst from those in The Golden Hind of "our General is lost," and from that moment she was never seen or heard of afterwards. Sir Humphrey had been seated at the Grange, in Devonshire (as the estate was then called) which property remained with his family until its disposal in 1780, since which period it has passed into the possession of the Garrett family. The Grange is now but a ruin yet of interest as a castle of the early period.

It is a revered thing to see an ancient castle not in decay; how much more to behold an ancient family which has stood against the waves and weathers of time.—Bacon.

Abner Gilbert was Sergeant of the 10th Company 17th Regiment of State Militia in 1792. Here with is a copy of his commission:

STATE OF CONNECTICUT.

To Abner Gilbert:— You being chosen as Sergeant in the 10th Company, 17th Regiment of Militia—I do by Virtue of Authority vested in me by the Laws of this State, authorize you to act as such in said Company, until legally discharged from the same; and direct that you be obeyed in said Office, and that you strictly observe all orders given by, or received from your superior Officer or Officers; and that you take Rank from the 5th day of May, 1792 when you was appointed.

Given under my hand at Litchfield this 5th day of May, 1792.

“So the multitude goes like the flower or the weed
That withers away to let others succeed:

So the multitude comes, even those we behold
To repeat every tale that has often been told.

For we are the same that our fathers have been;
We see the same sights our fathers have seen;
We drink the same stream and view the same sun
And run the same course our fathers have run.”

—William Knox.

From Jonathan Gilbert to the present generation (1617-1903) is a long stretch of two hundred and eighty six years, but the passing generations through all these centuries have builded for good, have stood as the firm bulwarks of the commonwealth, and the end is not yet.
